China's mattress market is gradually entering maturity

High-class:

Large international brands

Middle-class:

Domestic well-known brands

Low-class:

Local brands and general mattress manufacturer

- Chinese consumers generally perceive imported mattresses as premium, hence many foreign mattress brands are pitched to the high end market. Thus, the high-class competitors are represented by big international brands.
- The leading middle-class competitors are mostly domestic brands. The low-class competitors consist of generic brands from local mattress manufacturers.

- Consumption has increased fourteen-fold since 2002, now the mattress market in China is gradually entering maturity.
- With the CAGR of 17.77% over the last decade, China's mattress market surpassed that of the United States in 2015, becoming the largest in the world.

What do Chinese consumers look for in a mattress (1/2)

- The improvement of living standards has prompted people to have specific requirements for their sleeping environment, mattress quality and appearance. The emergence of mattress production technology can meet the needs of a variety of people.
- When purchasing mattresses, consumers mainly focus on the material and sustainability. In China, sustainability is not only an environmental issue, but there is a perception that it has less pollutants.
- Chinese people typically prefer a hard bed, so they tend to choose hard mattresses, in contrast to western countries which prefer softer.

Consumers' mattress cleaning methods (2018)

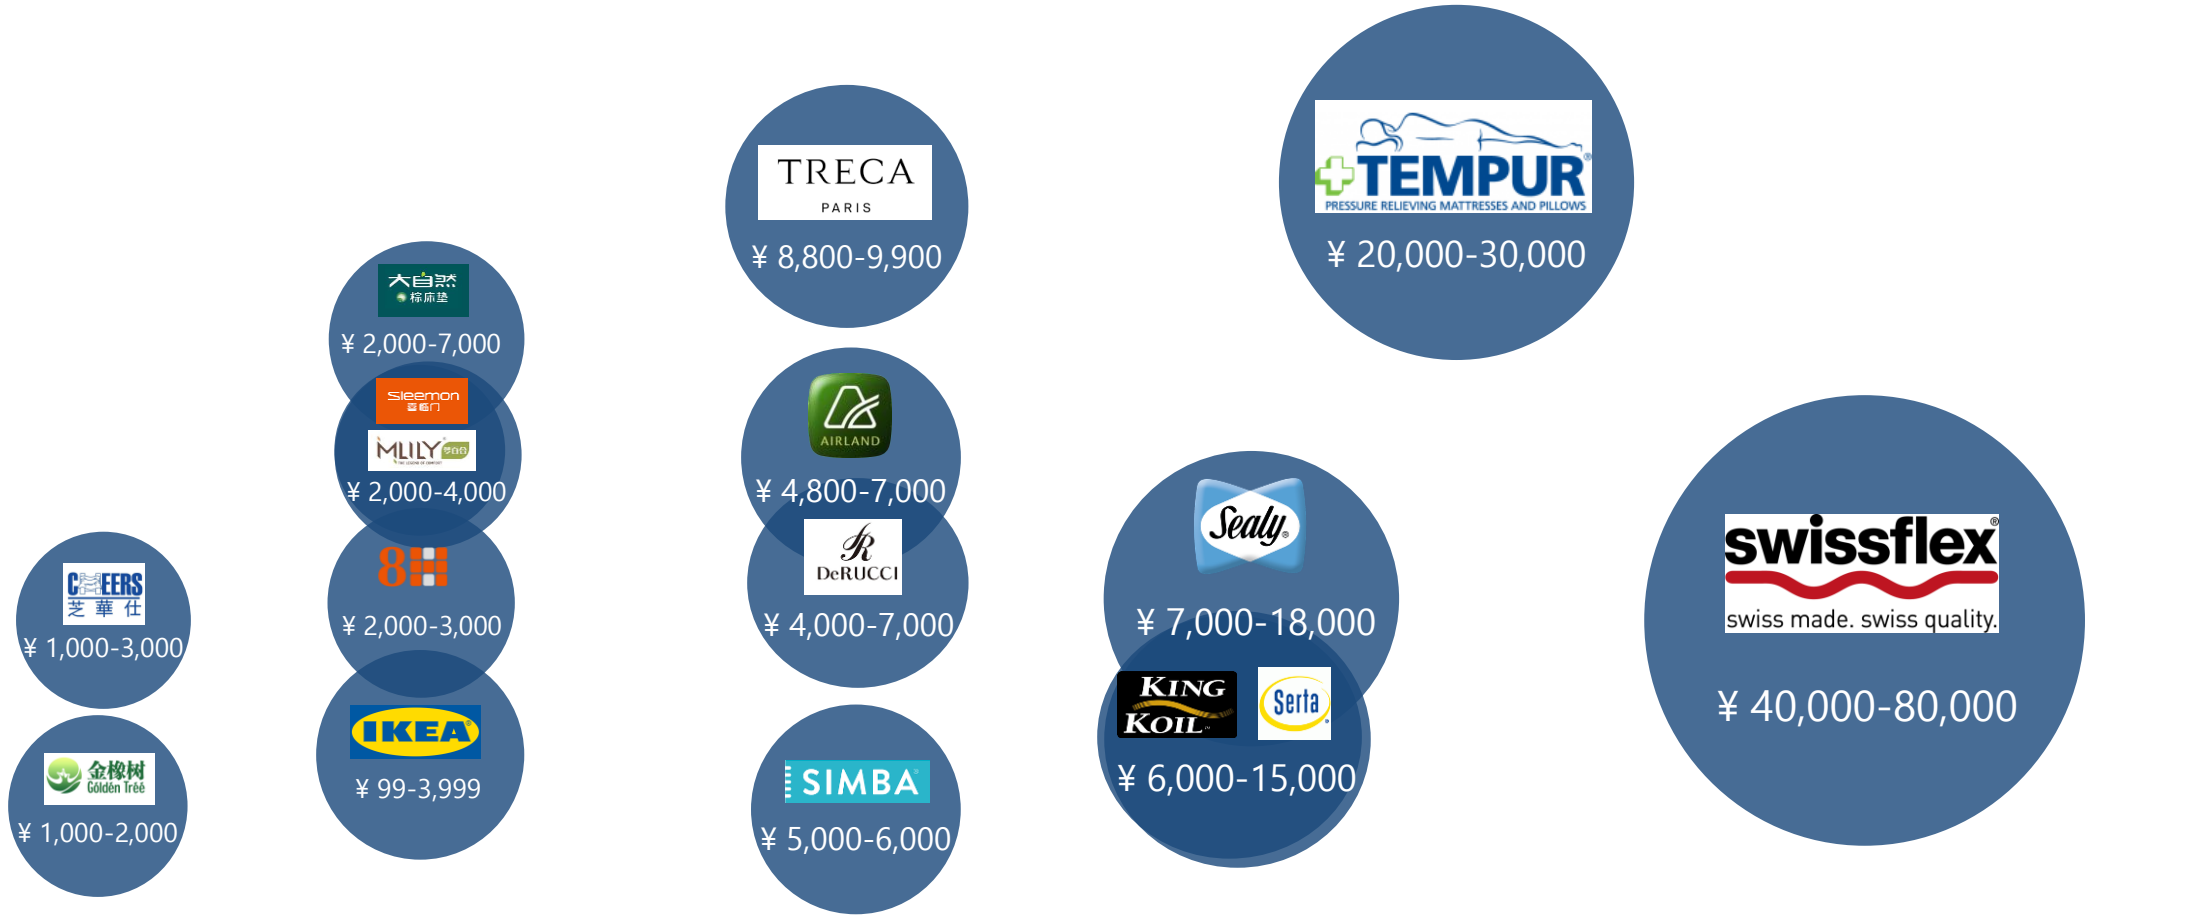

- After sale services are important for many Chinese mattress consumers. These include delivery, installation, returns, cleaning and removing mites.
- Digging deeper, more than half of Chinese consumers value regular mite removal. However, the process is too complicated to do it themselves. Regular cleaning services would be a powerful selling point in China's mattress market.
